Brothers.

We take you now by the hand and through you we take the people who sent you here by the hand, and assure you that we are pleased that the Great Spirit has let us see each other and converse together upon the subjects which you have communicated to us.

Brothers.

You see there is not a large number of us here; what you have said to us will not remain with those who are here alone, it will be communicated to all your red brethren in this country, and I again repeat that I am convinced they will be glad to hear what you have said to us - to our women, and to our children.

Brothers.

When we saw you, with the rest of our brothers, in Baltimore, upwards of two years ago, I expect you recollect perfectly the conversation between us at that time and place; I there, with my brother chiefs, told you, that we were glad to find you so much disposed to assist us, and our women and children - we told you that your good wishes should be made known to all your red brethren in this country - this has been done.

Brothers

Ever since that time, I as well as some other of my brother chiefs, have been endeavouring to turn the minds of our people towards the cultivation of the earth - but I am sorry to say, we have not yet been able to effect any thing.

Brothers.

As many of our chiefs and principal people are not present, we could not now undertake to give you any pointed answer. We expect in a few moons there will be many of our people together - at that time it will be proper that we should return you an answer to all the subjects you now mention to us.

Brothers.

The things you have said to us require our greatest attention; it appears to be really necessary we should deliberate upon them. In order to do so we must beg you to leave the papers upon which they are written, that we may communicate them to our chiefs, when they assemble.

Brothers.

All the things which you have said to-day were certainly calculated for our good - you have enumerated to us the different kinds of grain and animals we ought to raise for our comfort - you have told us that if we adopt the plan you propose, we should want for nothing. - This, brothers, myself and many of our people believe is true, and we hope we shall finally be able to convince our young men, that this is the plan we ought to adopt to get our living.

Brothers.

You have come a long distance to render service to us, we hope your visit will meet with the success you wish. You have been very particular in pointing out to us what will be for our good. You have been very particular in pointing out to us the duties of our women, and you have told us that in adopting your mode of living, our numbers would encrease & not diminish; in all this I perfectly agree with you, and I hope the other chiefs will also.

Brothers.

We are pleased to hear you say you are going to leave one of your brothers with us, to shew us in what manner you cultivate the earth, we shall endeavour, brothers, to make his situation amongst us as agreeable to him as will be possible for us.

Brothers.

We are convinced the plan you propose will be highly advantageous to your red brethren - We are convinced you
