

Meeting, at that time very large, and the members widely dispersed. In the same year she was married to Roger Brooke, of Sandy Spring particular meeting, in Maryland, where she continued to reside the remainder of her life. — For several years after her marriage, her services in the Ministry were confined principally within the limits of the Quarterly meeting to which she belonged, tho' she occasionally visited some other meetings in Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania, during the revolutionary war, she experienced many very trying seasons, which she was favoured to sustain with such a degree of prudence, and patient resignation, as obtained the respect and admiration of her friends and acquaintances. Nearly the whole of this period her lips were sealed as to ministerial service — but after these proving dispensations had passed over, her public appearances, again became frequent, to the great satisfaction of her friends — sometimes — visited neighbouring meetings — and, in the year 1793, in company with her sister Margaret Elgar, she visited most of the meetings in Virginia, and shortly after, with the same friend, nearly all the meetings of friends in New Jersey, and a considerable number in the States of New York and Pennsylvania — She was afterwards engaged in visiting the families of Friends composing Baltimore and Fairfax Monthly meetings.
