An Essay, of an Epistle to the Yearly Meeting of London, was read and approved and the clerk is directed to sign it with those produced at former sittings, on behalf of this meeting.

The Clerk is also directed to forward copies of the Epistles received to our subordinate meetings and hereafter to have them printed and call upon the Treasurers of the Yearly Meeting to defray the expense.

The Representatives being called are present as at the first sitting.

We have seldom come up to our Annual gathering under a feeling of greater weakness and the language of our hearts has been, "By whom shall Jacob arise for he is small" yet while sorrowfully conscious that infirmities still abound, we are constrained gratefully to acknowledge, that the Helper of his people has been mindful of us, and
