

life. He constantly reminded the monthly meeting that the future of society of Friends depended upon the children, and encouraged young people to improve their lives and take an active part in Quaker activities.

He was always generous with his time and finances and encouraged others to give to Friends activities and projects.

Emmet Fraser gave every fiber of his being to the furtherance of the Kingdom of God on this earth, and no memorial would be more perfect in his eyes than a resurgence of Quaker influence in the Christian movement.
