

174

viz: A. Morris Carey, Anna K. White, Jr., Anna K. Thomas, Carey, John N. Patten, Ella Hartshorne, S. Johnston Nichols, J. Eder Wetherald and Rachel J. Hopkins
 Lewis H. Hoge
 committee in order to arrange (with the Friends meeting where the quarterly Meeting meets) the holding of conferences should way open. It suggests that at the quarterly meeting held in 1870 in Baltimore, the conference should form an independent part of the Q. M. which should be held on an evening previous to the same should be Q. M. when the first session of the committee

Association was remarkable. He was a great favorite as a lives. His influence over the lives of the members of our with them. He was interested in all the concerns in their of him, as an old man grown away from or out of sympathy upon men; never allowed them to look upon him, or to think strong faith and rich experiences. He never lost his touch help, and pouring into the undeveloped life some of his own than when sitting quietly with one young fellow who needed Secretary of the Association wrote: "He was never happier more; for his death takes from them a true friend." The whose loss is great indeed, but to every young man in Balti-we extend our sympathy not only to his bereaved family, young men of the city seems almost irreparable and contain these words: "The loss to the Association and to the concerning his decease by the Trustees of this Association Executive Committee till his death. The resolutions adopted to 1884, when he declined a re-election, but remained on the important. Of this institution he was President from 1877 Men's Christian Association in Baltimore was large and His work for young men in connection with the Young holding their confidence. to his interest; he seemed to have the power of winning and was largely for the young men, and they responded eagerly and villages in England. On these occasions his concern times, and also held services in a number of the towns Yearly Meeting once, and London Yearly Meeting three a number of the Yearly Meetings on this continent. He visited not very frequent, but they were rather extensive. He visited with brevity of expression. His travels as a minister were were remarkable for forcible presentation of truth combined opportunity for the exercise of their gifts. His sermons the importance of leaving to others in the meeting full real message every time that he spoke, and he never forgot cations. He had a strong sense of the need of receiving a most impressed with the variety and interest of his communi-age. Those who heard him the most frequently were the unusual grasp of the needs and possibilities of the present and reading constantly abreast of current thought, had an

175

08

81

175D

speaker, and knew how to make the 'great theme' attractive to young men. His wholesome sunny life was a benediction." When the noon-day prayer meetings for business men were being held, merchants would say, "If Dr. Thomas is to lead to-day, I will go; for he seems to know about our difficulties and temptations."

He was accustomed to spend his summers at his country residence in the Blue Ridge Mountains, and during this season of rest and relaxation he was unwearied in promoting all kinds of Christian work in the neighborhood. He always attended and frequently conducted the union services; and, in addition, held in his own house every First day morning for many years a Friends' meeting, to which all were welcomed. Many have testified to the spiritual help received in these meetings.

As a physician Dr. Thomas had a large and absorbing practice, and was careful to keep well up with the rapid march of medical science. To his skill in treating disease was added unusual power of personal sympathy, and many testimonials have been received from his patients of the spiritual help and comfort which he brought to them.

While giving so much time to definitely religious work and to his profession, his interests and sympathies were not confined to these. Every movement that promised improvement and elevation of the people, if he could approve of it, found in him active support and advice, and often he would take his seat upon the platform in a public meeting where some neglected reform was to be advocated, so as to commit himself openly to the cause.

He was specially interested in education, and was a Manager of Haverford College for many years, and an active Trustee of the Johns Hopkins University and of Bryn Mawr College during their formative years, and he exercised no slight influence upon their course and development. He was also actively interested in a number of the charitable

175