to cross "The Line" that day - and explained what that meant, in her own patient way. ^{and} that we often ^{had} storms of wind, rain, at that season of the year, &c. I was much interested, and went out again, and again, ^{and} looked up at the Sun, expecting to see some great commotion in the sky, until I was almost blinded - and was so disappointed that I could not see the performance, which I expected would be visible to all eyes. ~

I expect our dear Cousin Elizabeth Hopkins is often a weary watcher over her youngest sister, now from what I can hear, nearing the end of her life's journey. ~

"O, to be ready to enter in
Through the gates of pearl, to where sorrow,
Entereth not!" ~ ^{~ and sin} May she be ready.

A late letter from my Sister Elizabeth B. Hopkins informs that she is as well as usual, except
