

feels that the business organizations stand for nothing, better than mere town boosting, the churches have neglected the application of religion to life.

"The town of Salisbury needs an active local interracial committee."

Dr. Mitchell Tells Of Inquiry On Shore

Dr. Broadus Mitchell, associate professor of political economy at the Johns Hopkins University, said last night that he had made a trip to Salisbury for the purpose of the inquiry two weeks after the lynching of the Negro.

He spent from Friday to Sunday in the Eastern Shore town, he said, and talked to approximately a dozen persons who claimed to have intimate knowledge of the lynching. Among them, he said, were ministers, several Negro residents, Sheriff G. Murray Phillips, members of the police force and two bank presidents.

While his original report contained the names of the two persons who made efforts to halt the mob from the hanging and the burning, Dr. Mitchell said that he did not feel at liberty to make them public since the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America had omitted them from the publication of the abstract of his report.